INFO NOTE

Key Benefits

Great colour for your courtyard pots and gardens with a minimum of fuss. These new Aussie Winners Calibrachoa hybrids take these popular plants to a new level. So easy to grow, they will produce huge quantities of small petunia-like flowers on well-rounded plants for a long season. Trial plants in southern Queensland have grown for over a year and flowered throughout the warmer months.

Origin

Superbells were bred in Japan and selected for their larger flowers and much greater disease resistance than earlier Calibrachoa varieties. They are also distinguished by their distinctive, vibrant colours and their vigour and heat tolerance that results in prolific flowering for a long period.

Uses

Superbells look superb in containers or hanging baskets on a patio, deck or in a courtyard or planted in the garden. Superbells are the ideal plant for adding long-lasting potted colour highlights to the low-maintenance 'outdoor room'. Individual colours can be planted alone or in combinations or mix and match Superbells with other flowering plants. They can be planted in garden beds for a mass display or for eye-catching highlights.

Care

Grow Superbells in sun or part shade. Plant into rich, well-drained garden beds rich in humus and add a small quantity of fertiliser, or use a premium potting mix in containers. Water well until plants are established and then water as needed – but don't overdo it. Over-wet roots are the main cause of failure of Calibrachoa. Prune plants every few months to remove spent flowers. Cut back to the edge of the pot or basket. Apply flower-boosting liquid fertiliser rather than fertiliser that is high in nitrogen, which will encourage foliage at the expense of flowers.
